What is a credit union?

Credit unions are community savings and loan cooperatives, where members pool their savings to lend to one another and help to run the credit union. A cooperative is an organisation that is owned and jointly managed by a group of people for members who use its services.

Credit unions have become more popular in the last few years and thousands of employees across Britain benefit from payroll deduction to a credit union which gives them an easy and convenient way to save and borrow.

→ Membership

You can join a credit union if you share a 'common bond' with other members, such as:

- living or working in the same area
- working for the same employer, or
- belonging to the same trade union, church or other association.

Each credit union has its own 'common bond', but will usually be based on one or more of the examples above.

→ Services offered by credit unions

All credit unions offer savings and loan accounts. Many also offer free life or loan-protection insurance, and some offer other insurance products including travel, motor and contents insurance. A few (usually larger ones) offer extra services such as:

- ISAs (Individual Savings Accounts)
- funeral plans
- mortgages
- current accounts or pre-paid cards
- budgeting and debt management.

Key points

- Credit union members share any profits because there are no external shareholders.
- In Britain over 1 million people now belong to a credit union.

How they can help you manage your money

→ Why choose a credit union?

A credit union can help you get your finances under control.

While they exist to serve anyone they may be more willing to help you than a high-street bank or building society if you have a low income, or do not have a previous record of borrowing. They:

- encourage people to save on a regular basis – weekly, fortnightly or monthly
- accept small amounts
- are willing to lend small amounts, and
- agree to loans based on how able you are to repay them and how much you need.

→ Saving with a credit union

You can pay money into your account in several ways:

- at local collection points
- direct from your wages through payroll deductions (if your employer has an arrangement with a local credit union to collect such payments)
- by standing order or Direct Debit, or
- if you receive state benefits, by having them paid into your credit union account.

Not all credit unions will offer all the methods listed here for paying money into your account.

You can take money out:

- at local collection points (such as by cashing a cheque at a local post office, or by cash at a credit union office)
- by arranging for payments to be made directly to your bank account if you have one (known as Bacs)
- with some of the smaller credit unions, by pass book, and
- with some credit unions, by using a debit card at a cash machine.

Some credit unions offer a fixed rate of interest on savings, but most give you a yearly pay-out called a 'dividend'. The dividend is the way in which the credit union shares its profits with its members and the amount you receive, if any, will vary depending on how much profit the credit union has made in the year. The rates of return will vary depending on the credit union and the type of account you have.

Some credit unions offer Christmas savings accounts where you have to give notice if you want to take your money out before November each year. This may be a good way of saving for Christmas as you may be less tempted to take out your money than with an ordinary savings account.

➔ Borrowing from a credit union

Credit unions have different ways of lending money. Some will lend to you as soon as you become a member, although they will want to make sure you have enough money after paying your bills to afford the repayments on the loan.

Others will lend to you after you have shown them you are able to save regularly. This may mean saving for a few weeks before you can apply to borrow from them.

Credit unions usually lend small amounts for any purpose, for example to pay for household goods, the cost of Christmas or car repairs.

Most credit unions can lend money for up to five years for an unsecured loan, and up to ten years for a secured loan. (A secured loan is tied to one of your assets, usually your car or home. If you don't repay the loan, the credit union has the right to sell that asset to get its money back.)

Some credit unions can lend larger sums over longer terms, for example to buy a car or pay for home improvements, but this may be as a secured loan.

When you borrow from a credit union, you may get free life insurance to cover the value of the loan. This means that the insurance repays the loan if you die before paying it back in full. If you don't make your repayments, credit unions can, if necessary, get back any money you owe them:

- by using debt-collection agencies
- through the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) if you are receiving state benefits, or
- through the County Court if you are employed.

Borrowing charges

For smaller, shorter term loans credit unions charge much lower interest rates on loans than doorstep lenders and payday lenders; and larger loans can be below 10% APR (often lower than some bank interest rates). The Interest rates charged will vary depending on the type of the loan but cannot be more than 3% interest per month (equivalent to an APR of 42.6%).

Check with your local credit union for its interest rates on loans. If you decide to repay a credit union loan early, they will not charge you a penalty.

For more information and advice about different types of borrowing and how to ensure you can afford to pay it back

➔ Search for 'Borrowing money' on moneyadviceservice.org.uk

Example

If you borrowed £500 over 6 months from a credit union and made repayments on time each month, you could expect to pay back £92.31 per month for 6 months costing you £553.79 in total (including £53.79 interest).

If you borrow a similar amount from a home credit provider the cost would be 3 or 4 times higher.

Key points

- ➔ Credit unions are an easy way to save or borrow
- ➔ Credit unions can help you get your finances under control.

➔ When thinking of joining a credit union

- ➔ Check how you can pay money in and withdraw it, and that it's right for you.
- ➔ Check how much they usually lend and for how long. Some lend small amounts over short periods and some will lend more over longer periods.
- ➔ Check whether you need to be a saver before they allow you to borrow, if borrowing is important to you.
- ➔ Check what other services they offer, for example Christmas savings accounts, current accounts or insurance.
- ➔ Use our online Budget planner to help you work out what you can afford to save –

Join the credit union if you are happy with the services on offer.

Finding a credit union

All credit unions must have the words 'Credit Union' in their title, or in Wales they can have 'Undeb Credyd'. As their titles do not have to include a place name, you can't always search for a credit union by the name of your town or borough.

- ➔ Find a credit union in your area on ➔ findyourcreditunion.co.uk
- ➔ In Northern Ireland: Irish League of Credit Unions and the Ulster Federation of Credit Unions.

See Useful contacts – page 9

→ Checking out a credit union

Credit Unions are regulated by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA), which means they have to abide by certain rules and, if you have savings with them, your money is protected up to a limit of £85,000 should the credit union fail (this limit is the same for bank and building society deposit accounts). This means credit unions have to meet certain standards and the FCA has to approve the people who hold important positions within them.

It also means that credit union members can go to the Financial Ombudsman Service and the Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS) if things go wrong.

If things go wrong

→ Complaints

If things go wrong, you should first contact the credit union to give it the opportunity to put right what you are unhappy about. It must follow a set procedure when dealing with complaints.

If you're not happy with how the credit union has resolved your complaint, you can contact the Financial Ombudsman Service – see Useful contacts.

→ Compensation

If a credit union is unable or likely to be unable to pay claims against it, you may be able to get compensation from the FSCS. The amount of compensation the FSCS can pay each member is limited to £85,000. Visit the website for further information – see fscs.org.uk
